Hannah Stone is an associate in the San Francisco office of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher. She currently practices in the firm's Litigation Department. Her practice focuses on commercial litigation matters in federal and state court, internal investigations, and high-stakes matters related to government investigations, regulatory inquiries, and enforcement actions.

Hannah's representative matters include defending a financial institution in connection with civil and criminal investigations by the DOJ and multiple U.S. Attorney's Offices relating to federal guaranteed loan programs for alleged violations of the False Claims Act; representing a leading technology company in litigation and securing opinion from the California Court of Appeal reversing order denying motion to compel arbitration; conducting independent investigation for a national professional sports team in connection with allegations of sexual abuse involving the team's youth development program; representing a law firm in obtaining favorable settlement of professional negligence claims; and representing a leading IT service provider in a two-week civil jury trial in the Central District of California.

She also maintains an active pro bono practice, including representing youth offenders in their post-conviction matters.

Hannah graduated summa cum laude from Loyola Law School of Los Angeles, where she was elected to the Order of the Coif. While in law school, she served as a Judicial Extern to the Honorable Robert G. Klausner, United States District Judge for the Central District of California. Hannah also was a member of the Juvenile Innocence and Fair Sentencing Clinic and served as an articles editor for the Loyola of Los Angeles Law Review. Prior to law school, Hannah received her B.S. in Journalism from California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, where she was recruited and played for the Division I tennis team.

She is admitted to practice in the State of California.
